GOAL SETTING

Big goals. Real steps. Your life, on your terms.

The original template had the right basic bones: define the main goal, explain why it matters and how it could affect your life, list action steps and deadlines, then reflect on challenges, support and next steps.

We're keeping every one of those pieces. But a one-page table is not much help when the goal is messy, motivation disappears, life gets in the way or you realise halfway through that the goal wasn't even yours in the first place.

This workbook turns goal setting into a process: choose something meaningful, pressure-test it, work out what success actually means, break it down, plan around obstacles, track progress and change the plan without declaring yourself a failure.

A goal is a direction plus a decision. It is not a legally binding contract with Past You.

1. START WITH THE ACTUAL GOAL

What do I want?

Say it again without making it sound impressive:

If nobody else ever knew I achieved this, would I still want it?

Is this a goal, a wish, a project, a habit, a problem to solve, or somebody else's expectation?

What would success look like in ordinary real-life terms?

What would NOT be necessary for this to count as success?

REALITY CHECK

If you can't describe the goal without using twelve motivational buzzwords, we may not have found the bloody goal yet.

2. FIND YOUR WHY - WITHOUT WRITING A TED TALK

Why is this important to me?

How could achieving it affect my life?

What would become easier, better, freer, safer, more interesting or more satisfying?

What happens if I do nothing?

Am I chasing this because I want the result - or because I want approval/status/proof?

Which part of the goal matters most?

YOUR ONE-SENTENCE WHY

Your why does not need to make you cry dramatically into a journal. It just needs to be true enough to remember when motivation fucks off.

3. IS THIS GOAL ACTUALLY MINE?

Who benefits if I achieve this?

Who expects me to do it?

What would I choose if nobody was disappointed either way?

Am I trying to prove something?

Does this fit my values, priorities and current life?

What would I change about the goal if I stopped trying to make it look respectable?

KEEP / CHANGE / BIN

- KEEP IT - still mine.
- CHANGE IT - right direction, wrong version.
- BIN IT - apparently I have been doing admin for somebody else's expectations.

4. DEFINE SUCCESS

What exactly will be different when this goal is achieved?

How will I know?

What can I measure or observe?

What is the minimum version that would still matter?

What is the ideal version?

What is outside my control even if I do everything right?

SUCCESS STATEMENT

Make success specific enough to recognise, but not so rigid that one delayed Tuesday murders the whole plan.

5. BREAK THE BASTARD DOWN

MILESTONE 1 - FIRST PROPER SHIFT

What needs to be true by this point?

Target date / rough timeframe:

MILESTONE 2 - BUILD MOMENTUM

What needs to be true by this point?

Target date / rough timeframe:

MILESTONE 3 - GET CLOSE

What needs to be true by this point?

Target date / rough timeframe:

MILESTONE 4 - FINISH / REVIEW

What needs to be true by this point?

Target date / rough timeframe:

If a milestone still feels enormous, it isn't a milestone. It's another goal wearing a fake moustache.

6. ACTION PLAN

ACTION	WHEN?	SUPPORT / RESOURCE	DONE

Write actions you can actually DO. 'Be successful' is not an action. 'Email three people' is.

7. THE FIRST BLOODY STEP

What is the smallest useful action I can take?

Can I do it in under 15 minutes?

What do I need before I can start?

Am I inventing preparation because starting feels uncomfortable?

When exactly will I do it?

What will make it easier to begin?

MY FIRST STEP:

You do not need to feel ready. You need a step small enough to survive your current level of readiness.

8. OBSTACLE AUTOPSY - BEFORE THEY HAPPEN

What is most likely to get in the way?

What has derailed similar goals before?

Where could time become a problem?

Where could money/resources become a problem?

What happens when my energy or motivation drops?

Which parts depend on other people?

What is Plan B if the obvious route stops working?

IF / THEN PLANNING

If _____ happens, then I will _____.

If _____ happens, then I will _____.

If _____ happens, then I will _____.

9. MOTIVATION IS AN UNRELIABLE LITTLE SHIT

What can I do even when motivation is low?

What routine or trigger could make action more automatic?

What can I prepare in advance?

What task is so small I can usually do it on a bad day?

What reward/feedback actually motivates me?

Who can help with accountability without becoming my unpaid parole officer?

MINIMUM-VIABLE PROGRESS

Consistency does not mean doing the maximum every day. It means having a version of progress that still exists when life gets loud.

10. SUPPORT & RESOURCES

What information do I need?

What skill might I need to learn?

What tools/resources would make this easier?

Who could advise me?

Who could practically help?

What do I need to ask for clearly?

What am I stubbornly trying to do alone for no good reason?

ASK FOR THE BLOODY THING

'Could you help me with ____?'

'Do you know anyone who ____?'

'Can you check in with me on ____?'

'I need advice on ____, not general encouragement.'

11. PROGRESS CHECK-IN

What have I completed?

What moved forward even if it isn't finished?

What challenges have I faced?

What support do I need now?

What have I learned?

What part of the plan is working?

What part clearly isn't?

What are my next steps?

PROGRESS IS DATA

A plan not working is information. It is not a character reference.

12. WHEN YOU FALL OFF THE PLAN

What actually happened?

Was the plan unrealistic, or did life change?

Did I avoid something uncomfortable?

Did I lose interest because the goal changed?

What do I need to restart?

What can I make smaller?

What am I tempted to call 'failure' that is really just interruption?

RESTART RULE

Do not restart from imaginary Day One unless you genuinely need to. Restart from where you fucking are.

13. WHEN THE GOAL CHANGES

What has changed since I set this goal?

Do I still want the same outcome?

What new information do I have?

Would changing the goal be wisdom or avoidance?

What part still matters?

What is the revised goal?

Changing a goal is allowed. Dragging an obsolete plan behind you purely because you wrote it in pen is not commitment.

14. CELEBRATE THE WIN WITHOUT MOVING THE GOALPOST

What did I achieve?

What did it take from me?

What skill did I build?

What did I do differently this time?

Who helped?

What am I proud of?

How am I celebrating before immediately inventing another target?

You are allowed to acknowledge the fucking thing before turning yourself back into a productivity machine.

15. MY ONE-PAGE GOAL MAP

MY GOAL:

WHY IT MATTERS:

SUCCESS LOOKS LIKE:

FIRST STEP:

NEXT MILESTONE:

BIGGEST LIKELY OBSTACLE:

MY PLAN B:

SUPPORT I CAN USE:

MY MINIMUM-VIABLE PROGRESS:

NEXT REVIEW DATE:

7-DAY GET-IT-MOVING CHALLENGE

Not seven days to achieve your life goal. Seven days to stop merely thinking about it.

DAY 1: Define the goal and why it matters.

DAY 2: Decide what success actually looks like.

DAY 3: Break it into milestones.

DAY 4: Take the smallest useful first action.

DAY 5: Identify your biggest likely obstacle and create Plan B.

DAY 6: Ask for one piece of support, information or help.

DAY 7: Review what moved and choose the next bloody step.

FINAL REFLECTION

What goal am I taking forward?

Why does it matter to me?

What am I doing first?

What obstacle am I ready for?

What support will I use?

What does minimum progress look like?

How will I know when the plan needs changing?

What will I do instead of waiting to feel perfectly ready?

A FINAL FLAMINGORISE NOTE

Goals are supposed to help you build a life - not turn your life into one endless performance review.

Choose something that matters. Make it clear. Break it down. Start before you're perfectly ready. Pay attention to what happens. Change the plan when the evidence says change it.

Then, when you get there, stop for five bloody minutes and acknowledge that you did.

Small steps. Real change. A brighter you.

Rise. Heal. Soar.
