

FlamingoRise

REAL TOOLS. BRIGHTER TOMORROWS.

PAUSE.
BREATHE.
RESET.
YOU'VE GOT THIS.

Rise & Reset

GUIDED MEDITATION WORKBOOK

A gentle, practical guide to help you calm your mind, reduce stress and reconnect with yourself through guided meditation, reflection and everyday practice.

Same
Brilliant You
Just Bolder

FULL GUIDED SCRIPT

BREATH & BODY AWARENESS

VISUALISATION & POSITIVE FOCUS

REFLECTION PROMPTS

MAKE IT PART OF YOUR ROUTINE

A CALMER, CLEARER YOU

SMALL STEPS.
REAL CHANGE.
A BRIGHTER YOU.

RISE & RESET

A short guided reset for when your brain has seventeen tabs open and at least three are playing music.

The original Rise & Reset meditation was a simple two-page script: get comfortable, notice your breath, relax your shoulders, imagine a soft pink light, rise above the day's noise and finish with the statement that you are 'grounded, healed and ready to soar.'

The core idea is lovely. The new version keeps the pause, breath, body awareness, imagery and FlamingoRise identity - but loses the promise that five minutes of meditation has somehow healed your entire nervous system before you've even made a cup of tea.

Use this when you want a deliberate pause: before starting again after a crap moment, between tasks, after work, before bed, or whenever you need to stop carrying the previous hour straight into the next one.

You can sit, lie down or stay supported however your body needs. Eyes open or closed. Skip imagery if you don't visualise easily. Breathe normally if deliberate breathing makes you uncomfortable.

Wellbeing note: This is a general guided meditation and reflection resource, not medical or mental-health treatment. Stop if the practice makes you feel dizzy, panicky, detached or unwell, and use another grounding/support strategy instead.

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

There is nothing to achieve here.

You do not need to empty your mind. You do not need to become calm on command. You do not need to sit perfectly still. The aim is simply to give yourself a few minutes in which you are not actively adding more shit to the pile.

If possible, choose somewhere reasonably comfortable. Reduce distractions if that's easy. If it isn't, work with the room you've got. Real life rarely provides a silent spa soundtrack on demand.

Choose what you want from this reset:

- I want a little more clarity.
- I want to slow down for a few minutes.
- I want to separate one part of the day from the next.
- I want to notice what I need.
- I don't know what I need. I just need five bloody minutes.

That's enough. Start there.

THE RISE & RESET GUIDED MEDITATION

Get yourself reasonably comfortable. Sit, lie down, lean against something - whatever works for your body today.

If closing your eyes feels comfortable, you can close them. If not, let your gaze rest somewhere neutral.

Notice your breathing without immediately trying to improve it. Just notice: in... and out.

If it feels good, let the next exhale be a little slower. Let your shoulders drop if they want to. Unclench your jaw if you've apparently been preparing to bite somebody.

Notice the places where your body is supported - the chair, bed, sofa, floor, wall. You do not have to hold yourself up quite so fiercely for the next few minutes.

Now notice what you've carried into this pause. A conversation. A task. A worry. Anger. Noise. Somebody else's mood. Your own impossible to-do list.

You don't need to solve any of it right now. Just name what is here.

THE RESET

Imagine - if imagery works for you - a warm pink light around you. Not magic. Not healing energy. Just a visual marker that says: this is the pause.

With each comfortable breath, imagine the noise of the last few minutes moving slightly further away. Not gone. Just not sitting directly on your face.

Ask yourself quietly:

What belongs to right now?

Not tomorrow. Not the whole week. Not every possible outcome. Right now.

What is the next thing that actually matters?

Maybe it's finishing a task. Maybe it's eating something. Maybe it's sending the email. Maybe it's resting. Maybe it's deciding that a problem can wait until you've got more information.

Let everything else stand in the queue for a minute.

If you want a phrase to return to, try:

I can pause without giving up.

I can deal with one thing at a time.

I do not need to solve everything in this moment.

THE RISE

The old meditation imagined rising above the noise like a flamingo lifting into the sky. We're keeping the flamingo because obviously we bloody are. ■

Imagine yourself getting just enough distance from the noise to see it more clearly. You are not escaping your life. You are changing your viewing angle.

From here, ask:

What can I control?
What can't I control?
What needs action?
What needs time?

Let one answer be enough.

Take another comfortable breath. Notice the support underneath you again. Notice the room around you. Listen for one ordinary sound.

Move your fingers or toes if that feels useful. Let your eyes refocus if they were closed.

You do not need to emerge transformed.

You just gave yourself a pause. Now choose what happens next.

AFTER THE RESET

What was taking up the most space in my head before I started?

What do I notice now?

What actually needs my attention next?

What can wait?

Is there a basic need I've been ignoring?

Do I need action, rest, information, support or a boundary?

What is ONE next step?

Clarity does not have to mean having the whole plan. Sometimes clarity is simply knowing the next five minutes.

MAKE IT YOURS

What time of day would this reset be most useful?

Do I prefer eyes open or closed?

Does imagery help me or can I happily bin it?

Which phrase from the meditation feels believable?

What physical position works best for me?

What length feels realistic - 2, 5, 10 minutes?

What would remind me to use this BEFORE I'm completely frazzled?

A useful practice is one you will actually use. Two minutes counts.

THE 60-SECOND RISE & RESET

For when five minutes is apparently an outrageous luxury.

1. PAUSE. Stop adding input for a moment.
2. NOTICE. Feel one point of physical support and one ordinary breath.
3. NAME IT. What is taking up the most space in my head?
4. SORT IT. Does it need action, time, information, support or nothing right now?
5. CHOOSE. What is the next useful thing?

That's the reset. No candles required.

7-DAY RESET EXPERIMENT

Use it in real life, not only when you're already at Defcon Fucking Flamingo.

DAY 1: Use the 60-second reset once.

DAY 2: Try the full meditation at a neutral time, not during a crisis.

DAY 3: Use it between two tasks to create a proper transition.

DAY 4: Try it after a frustrating interaction before deciding what to do next.

DAY 5: Use the reset before bed or at the end of your day.

DAY 6: Change one part that doesn't suit you - wording, posture, imagery or length.

DAY 7: Choose the version you would genuinely keep using.

FINAL REFLECTION

What part of the reset helped most?

What part felt unnecessary or annoying?

Did I get more clarity, more calm, or simply a useful interruption?

What situations is this practice best suited to?

When would I need something other than meditation?

What phrase or question do I want to remember?

What does my personal Rise & Reset look like from now on?

A FINAL FLAMINGORISE NOTE

You are not 'healed' because you completed a meditation. And you have not failed if you finish one still feeling pissed off, sad, worried or tired.

A reset is smaller than that - and much more useful.

It is the moment where you stop, notice what you're carrying and decide whether you want to keep carrying it into whatever comes next.

Pause. Breathe. Reset. Then take the next bloody step.

Rise. Heal. Soar.